On the other side, the resort to the contributions of health psychology has appeared necessary to cope with the changes introduced into the healthcare system through the decline of the dominant biomedical model and the dissatisfactions of the users faced with inequalities of access due, among other things, to a mechanism with multiple speeds. They themselves are constructing visions of what they may enable us to do in the future, and trying to bring these to fruition. They must accept to lose their power, take on a role of assistance, and abandon all forms of therapeutic intervention not related to the relief of pain. HerzlichC,AdamP. Kim and J.
